

Make something together

Participant worksheet · A first page is enough

Start with people, not publishing software.

1. Who would you like to reach?

Neighbors, family, volunteers, classmates, another small group...

2. What do you hope to share or make possible?

A thank-you, invitation, drawing, story, resource, or idea to try together.

3. Write one sentence:

I want to share _____ with _____ so they can _____.

Choose a format: ☐ one-page note ☐ flyer ☐ tiny zine ☐ short update

No account, newsroom, regular schedule or expensive printer is required.

Three things worth sharing

Write a title, a sentence, or a sketch idea for each item.

Thing 1: Something to celebrate

Leave this blank if it does not fit your page.

Thing 2: Something to try together

Leave this blank if it does not fit your page.

Thing 3: Something worth knowing

Leave this blank if it does not fit your page.

One item is enough for a finished first page.

Permission and care

Sharing can be joyful and thoughtful at the same time.

If you are sharing someone else's name, words, photo, story or artwork:

- ☐ Did I ask whether I may share it?
- ☐ Do I know where it may be shared and how the person wants credit?
- ☐ Is this private family or culturally restricted information?
- ☐ Would an organizer or responsible office need to confirm a time, cost, or rule?
- ☐ If something is uncertain, can I say so or leave it out?

What do I need to ask or check?

If everything is your own and not about a consequential claim, this may be simple.

Who could help me review or read the page?

Your sharing plan

A rough first page is already progress.

What will your page be called?

What would a reader be able to do next?

Who are five people—or one gathering—where it belongs?

Before sharing, check:

- ☐ I have permission for other people's material.
- ☐ Important dates, links, contacts and conditions are checked.
- ☐ The page is readable on a phone or in print.
- ☐ It does not imply official authority I do not have.
- ☐ There is a safe way for readers to ask a question or request a correction.

One page counts. You can stop here or make another when you want.
